

 Volver

La web vs. las redes sociales

En 1989 Brewster Kahle inventó el primer sistema de publicación a través de Internet: WAIS (Wide Area Information Server). Era un sistema Open Source. Después de él vendrían, en 1991 y casi simultáneamente, Gopher y la World Wide Web que en 1992 Tim Berners-Lee y Robert Caillou presentaron en el Xerox PARC. WAIS se ideó para solucionar el aislamiento del investigador.

Dave Winer (uno de los padres de los blogs e inventor del podcasting): “The web is so simple it can be hard to understand. Sometimes the problem is you don't know what questions to ask”

<https://twitter.com/joakinen/status/750293069015183360>

Tim Berners-Lee (inventor de la web): “Long live the web: A call for continued open standards and neutrality”

long_live_the_web_a_call_f...pdf

The Web as we know it, however, is being threatened in different ways. Some of its most successful inhabitants have begun to chip away at its principles. Large social-networking sites are walling off information posted by their users from the rest of the Web. Wireless Internet providers are being tempted to slow traffic to sites with which they have not made deals. Governments—totalitarian and democratic alike—are monitoring people's online hab

i ts, endangering important human rights.

If we, the Web's users, allow these and other trends to proceed unchecked, the Web could be broken into fragmented islands. We could lose the freedom to connect with whichever Web sites we want. The ill effects could extend to smartphones and pads, which are also portals to the extensive information that the Web provides

The Web Is Dead. Long Live the Internet

http://www.wired.com/2010/08/ff_webrip/

This was all inevitable. It is the cycle of capitalism. The story of industrial revolutions, after all, is a story of battles over control. A technology is invented, it spreads, a thousand flowers bloom, and then someone finds a way to own it, locking out others. It happens every time.

@solanasaurus: “Se ha pasado de los blogs a las redes sociales. Se pierden los links. Ahora hay redes cerradas y likes“

<https://twitter.com/CCCLab/status/750229019145150465>

Libertad y privacidad en la web

http://blogs.cccb.org/lab/es/article_llibertat-i-privacitat-a-la-web/

El creador de la Web y otros pioneros se alían para reinventarla

<http://www.bez.es/291575441/creador-Web-otros-pioneros-reinventarla.html>

From:

<https://cursos.filosofias.es/> - CURSOS

Permanent link:

<https://cursos.filosofias.es/doku.php/esalud/privacidad/web-vs-redes-sociales>

Last update: 2016/07/08 10:16